

The movement of compounds in the environment is driven by two processes, advection and diffusion. Of course, these processes occur in three dimensions, but for this class we'll begin with one dimensional processes before getting to more complicated examples.